

"La Perla", was hosting a party for the upper-class Amsterdammers in his luxurious mansion. The dress code was based on Tim Walker's eccentric fashion. Leonard, the first guest, was already in the gigantic living room that was decorated with three massive glass lamps, several dark paintings on the walls framed in gold and three silver Dutch candleholders located on top of the 3 metres long table. Leonard was wearing a white powdered wig, black tights, dark green waistcoat and white long silky gloves. His face was painted in white and had red lipstick. He was alone in the room and standing looking at one of the pictures on the wall. Suddenly, La Perla opened the door. (It made a squeaky noisy). And he entered the room in complete silence. La Perla was completely naked and, instead of clothes, had his whole body painted in silver, including his face and hair. He was wearing silver high-knee boots and a long perl necklace. He was holding a silver glass containing red wine. La Perla approached Leonard and gave him the drink.

La Perla: Thank you for coming, Leonard. I though you might want a glass of red wine. It is your favourite fine Claret.

Leonard: Oh, thank you very much. Don't you have a drink with me?

La Perla: In a minute. Lorena is outside the front door. I'll be right back with her.

And he left the room.